

Everything Grows

In the summer, the yellow sun glows. The wheat grows and grows. A hot wind blows across the wheat. The rows of wheat look like flowing water. Everything grows.

In the fall, the farmer mows the wheat. Everyone on the farm helps to stow the wheat in a safe, dry place until it is time to sell it. The crows try to eat some of the wheat. The kids help to shoo away the crows. Soon, the crows will fly south for the cold winter.

In the winter, the snow falls slowly to the ground. The kids throw chunks of snow for the dog to catch. They make a snowman with a bowl for a hat. Big kids tow small kids through the snow on a sled.

In the spring a warm wind blows. The snow melts. The crows come back. The children have grown. The farmer plants new rows of wheat. The yellow sun glows and the wheat begins to grow.
